A victory and adequate forces would cause Washington instantly to fall, redeem Maryland, and procure friendly treaties with foreign nations. The Government seems to rest satisfied with the immense responsibility thrown on this General. The people have no idea of how few men he has relatively, and would hardly believe it if told.—They have imagined, or have been led to believe, he has an army of forty thousand men. It might not be deemed "prudent" to say how many or how few he has; but it is a very insufficient force to do the work before him—Twenty-five to thirty thousand is really all. A portion of Gen Johnston's command has been asked by Gen Beauregard, who has been solicitous to conceal his lamentable weakness from the enemy, fearful that a knowledge of the truth might expose his whole force to destruction. A Cabues meeting was held to-day on the subject. It is probable the order for this movement has been seut, and that by to-morrow evening Busuregard will be reinforced by Johnston. FRIDAY MORNING, AUGUST 2, 1861.

FROM THE SOUTHERN PAPERS.

The following new view of the Southern army in Virginia is from a letter written in Richmond by the correspondent of the Charleston Mercury, on the Friday before the battle:

BEAUREGARD'S ARMY SMALL AND INADEQUATE.

Great complaints are made of the want of executive efficiency. Beauregard has much thousand a force for the work before him. We are left to fight desperate odds, and if we conquer, well taken.

Between two and three o'clock large numbers of men were leaving the field, some of them wounded, others exhausted by the long struggle, who gave us gloemy reports; but as the fire on both sides continued steadily, we felt sure that our brave Southerners had not been conquered by the overwhelming hordes of the North. It is, however, due to truth to say that North. It is, however, due to truth to say that the result at this hour hung trembling in the balance. We had lost numbers or our most distinguished officers. Generals Bartow and Lee had been stricken down; Lieut-Colonel Johnson, of the Hampton Legion, had been killed; Col. Hampton had been wounded, but there was at hand the fearless General whose reputation as a commander was staked on this battle; and with that chivalry which is his nature, General Beauregard prompely offered to lead the Hampton Legion into the action, which he executed in a style unsufpassed and unsurpassable.

THE ATTACK ON CLARINGTON.-Clarington is a small village in Monroe county, situated as the mouth of Sunfish Creek, which empties into the Ohio river. To attempt to give any particulars or any ad equate description of the scenes enacted during the day on which the news was spread over the country that Clarington was attacked by seces-sionists from over the river, would be altogether useless. The number of secessionists and the amount of people murdered by them, as the rumor flew on the wings of the wind, was mag-nified to most horrible proportions. The rumor traveled all over the counties of Monroe, Nobie, and the greater part of Belmont, and was tele-graphed to Columbus and Bellair. At Bellair there were three regiments who signified their mistake another arising from the opposite fault of rashness. For rash it certainly was to attack Gen. Beauregard on ground which he himself had selected, and elaborately fortified. Political considerations must have prevailed over meet at the City Hall, in the City of Columbus, on Saturday, the 3d of August, for the purpose of the morth.
